Durham looked hard at the young scoundrel, who was such a worthy instrument of a worthy instrument of Beryl. He would have liked to have examined him then and there to a look from Durham. "You go up with Mr. Durham, aunt."

"Come along then," said Miss Berengaria, hastening out of the room; "the sooner this is over the better. Ugh! I hate wills. They put me in mind of the family vault; and I can't last long now."

"Oh, yes, sir. But she was angry at me writing and telling you about the poor sick gentleman."

"By the way, Jerry, how did you find out about him?" asked Durham.

"By the way, Jerry, how did you find out about him?" asked Durham.
